Avraga is an archaeological site in eastern Mongolia that has been claimed to be Genghis Khan’s ordu—his base camp and home during some winters. In this talk Jack Fenner will present radiocarbon analyses of livestock bones from the site and evaluate whether the site chronology is compatible with this interpretation, and stable isotope data to assess isotopic variation in the environment and its impact on Mongol Empire human dietary analyses.